Airbus

From Climb to Cruise: PT Raised to €260

Airbus offers a visible path to mid-teens EBIT CAGR and ~20% + FCF CAGR through 2029. Combined with a €5bn buyback and improving execution, this should broaden the shareholder base and supports our increased €260 PT.

Our original investment thesis was that Airbus was undervalued because investors were focused on near-term operational challenges rather than the group's long-term earnings power. That argument remains valid, but we now have materially greater visibility around the path forward.

Execution remains the key risk. However, we believe the balance of risks is shifting. Airbus' decision to introduce a €12-13bn EBIT target for 2029 provides investors with significantly greater visibility over the company's medium-term earnings and FCF trajectory (mid-teens EBIT and ~20%+ FCF CAGR over 2025-29) and highlights management's growing confidence in the industrial ramp-up.

As production volumes continue to increase, we expect the focus of the investment case to shift towards the sustainable earnings power of the Commercial Aircraft division. In our view, the market continues to underestimate the degree of operating leverage on the A320 family. Reversing the 2029 framework implies an A320 profit contribution of roughly €14m per aircraft at rate 75, with incremental profitability approaching €16m per additional delivery.

A second important change in the equity story is the improving trajectory of Defence & Space. For years, the division was viewed primarily as a source of execution risk, earnings volatility and cash outflows. That perception is changing. The end of A400M cash outflows helped Defence & Space return to positive cash generation in 2025, while improving revenue and margins support confidence in the medium-term framework with earnings expected to grow low teens CAGR through 2029.

Equally important, the introduction of a €5bn buyback also marks an important step in Airbus' capital allocation story. Historically, many investors viewed Airbus as a company where cash generation was repeatedly reinvested into industrial challenges, inventory and programme execution. The recent announcement signals a greater willingness to return capital to shareholders.

Investment Implication: Greater earnings and FCF medium-term visibility and the newly announced €5bn buyback should broaden Airbus' shareholder base. Despite the improved outlook, Airbus continues to trade at a meaningful discount to both European aerospace and global aero OE peers. To align our valuation framework with the company's new medium-term ambitions, we roll our valuation forward to 2029 while keeping our valuation multiples unchanged. This increases our price target to €260 from €220. With the shares trading at €204, close to our downside value of €200 and well below our base case of €260, we believe Airbus offers an attractive asymmetric risk-reward profile (Figure 15).

Why OVERWEIGHT?

We see Airbus as one of the most compelling names in the civil aero sector given the A320's strong competitive position vs. the MAX in the single-aisle market and its balance sheet strength. In addition, relative valuation vs. peers looks attractive, in our view.

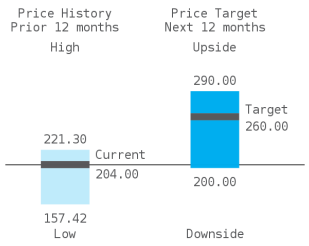

Upside case — EUR 290.00

Our upside case is based on 16x EV/EBIT and a 6% FCF yield, both of which we apply to our upside case (2029) forecasts, which reflect A320 delivery of 75 per month and pre R&D profit of ~€15mn per plane.

Downside case — EUR 200.00

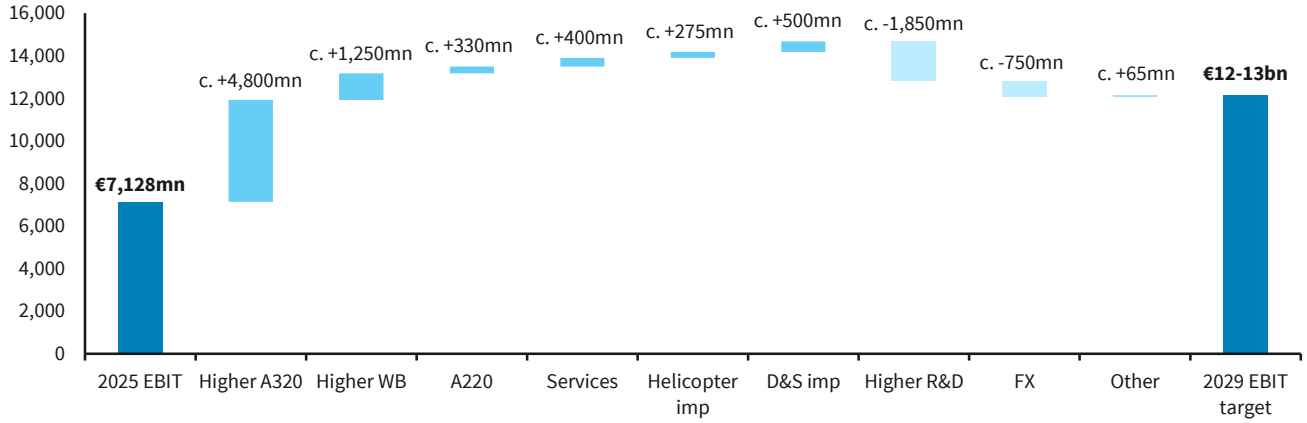

Our downside case is based on 14x EV/EBIT and a 6.5% FCF yield, both of which we apply to our downside case (2029) forecasts, which reflect A320 delivery of 68 per month and pre R&D profit of €14mn per A320.

Upside/Downside scenarios

The Next Chapter of Airbus Earnings...

Source: Company data, Barclays Research

The A320 family is expected to be the largest contributor to Airbus' ~80% EBIT growth between 2025 and 2029. We estimate the programme generated ~7.5bn of profit before R&D in 2025 and expect this to increase by ~€4.5bn by 2029.

FIGURE 2. Based on our forecasts, the A320 family contribution should move from ~7.5bn of profit before R&D in 2025 to a profit of above €12bn by 2029

Source: Barclays Research estimates

Our forecasts assume an A320 family production rate of 70 aircraft per month in 2029, below Airbus' target of 75. This reflects our assumption that annual narrowbody deliveries will remain equivalent to around 8% of the installed base, broadly in line with historical levels and including a 3% retirement rate. That said, higher retirement rates or a continued shift from widebody to narrowbody aircraft on 2,500-4,000nm routes, supported by the increasing range capabilities of the A321neo LR/XLR and MAX 9/10, could justify production rates closer to 75 aircraft per month.

Reversing Airbus' €12-13bn EBIT ambition suggests an A320 profit contribution of roughly €14m per aircraft at a production rate of 75 per month, with incremental profitability approaching €16m per additional delivery compared to 2025.

While this is above the profitability levels discussed by management several years ago, we believe the economics of the programme have materially improved.

Pricing should become an increasingly important earnings driver. A growing proportion of Airbus' 2029 deliveries will come from orders placed after 2022, when pricing conditions improved significantly. As these higher-priced aircraft enter the delivery mix, pricing should increasingly support profit expansion alongside the benefits of higher production volumes and fixed-cost absorption.

The product mix is also moving in Airbus' favour. The A321 has become the dominant variant within the A320 family thanks to its superior economics and range capability. The A321neo offers more range than the MAX 10 and greater seating capacity than the MAX 9, while the LR and XLR variants occupy a market segment with no direct Boeing competitor following the discontinuation of the 757.

As all final assembly lines are progressively configured to produce A321 aircraft, we expect the variant to represent around 75% of A320 family deliveries from 2028, up from 64% in 2025.

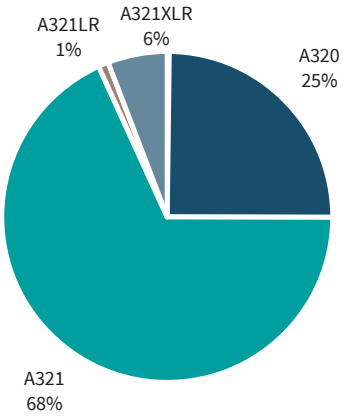

Given the significantly higher profitability of the A321 relative to smaller variants, this mix shift should provide an additional tailwind to programme earnings over the remainder of the decade.

Investment Conclusion: 2029 Target and Capital Allocation Should Broaden the Shareholder Base

Despite offering strong growth profile, Airbus continues to trade at a significant discount to most Aerospace stocks. While a valuation discount to Aero Engine manufacturers is justified by the superior earning predictability and visibility of that business model (installed base), we see scope for Airbus to narrow the gap as investors gain confidence in the earnings power embedded in the OE ramp-up. For global investors seeking exposure to the commercial OE cycle, Airbus remains one of the cheapest ways to participate in a multi-year production and cash flow recovery in our view.

The Path to 2029: Three Production Scenarios

To frame the potential earnings outcomes, we consider three scenarios. Our base case assumes A320 family production reaches 70 aircraft per month by 2029. The upside case reflects Airbus' stated ambition of 75 aircraft per month, while the downside case assumes production rates reach 68 aircraft per month.

At €204 per share, Airbus trades only marginally above our downside valuation of €200, compared with a base case of €260 and an upside case of €290. We believe this creates an attractive risk-reward profile.

Guide to the Barclays Fundamental Equity Research Rating System:
Our coverage analysts use a relative rating system in which they rate stocks as Overweight, Equal Weight or Underweight (see definitions below) relative to other companies covered by the analyst or a team of analysts that are deemed to be in the same industry (the "industry coverage universe").

In addition to the stock rating, we provide industry views which rate the outlook for the industry coverage universe as Positive, Neutral or Negative (see definitions below). A rating system using terms such as buy, hold and sell is not the equivalent of our rating system. Investors should carefully read the entire research report including the definitions of all ratings and not infer its contents from ratings alone.

Stock Rating
Overweight - The stock is expected to outperform the unweighted expected total return of the industry coverage universe over a 12-month investment horizon.

Equal Weight - The stock is expected to perform in line with the unweighted expected total return of the industry coverage universe over a 12-month investment horizon.

Underweight - The stock is expected to underperform the unweighted expected total return of the industry coverage universe over a 12-month investment horizon.

Rating Suspended - The rating and target price have been suspended temporarily due to market events that made coverage impracticable or to comply with applicable regulations and/or firm policies in certain circumstances including where the Investment Bank of Barclays Bank PLC is acting in an advisory capacity in a merger or strategic transaction involving the company.

Industry View
Positive - industry coverage universe fundamentals/valuations are improving.

Neutral - industry coverage universe fundamentals/valuations are steady, neither improving nor deteriorating.

Negative - industry coverage universe fundamentals/valuations are deteriorating.

Below is the list of companies that constitute the "industry coverage universe":

Valuation Methodology: We value European commercial aerospace stocks based on the midpoint of a relative EV/EBIT and FCF yield applied to our 2029E forecasts. We then include the discounted dividend stream over 2025-28. While in our forecasts we assume the €:$ spot rate for year 1 and use the forward rate for future years (which shows a 2-3 cent annual deterioration versus the current spot rate) to reflect the group's actual economic value, our approach is to mark to market the earnings and FCF and then adjust the out-of-the-money hedge book value at the current spot rate when computing the Enterprise Value. For Airbus, we use a 15x EV/EBIT multiple (a discount to the multiple we apply to commercial aero aftermarket suppliers) and a 6% FCF yield.

Risks which May Impede the Achievement of the Barclays Research Valuation and Price Target: Downside risk specific to Airbus could come from failure to execute on the manufacture of aircraft on schedule and/or costs.

Sustainable Investing Related Research: There is currently no globally accepted framework or definition (legal, regulatory or otherwise) of, nor market consensus as to what constitutes a 'sustainable', 'ESG', 'green', 'climate-friendly' or an equivalent company, investment, strategy or consideration or what precise attributes are required to be eligible to be categorised by such terms. This means there are different ways to evaluate a company or an investment and so different values may be placed on certain sustainability credentials as well as adverse ESG-related impacts of companies and ESG controversies. The evolving nature of sustainable investing considerations, models and methodologies means it can be challenging to definitively and universally classify a company or investment under a sustainable investing label and there may be areas where such companies and investments could improve or where adverse ESG-related impacts or ESG controversies exist. The evolving nature of sustainable finance related regulations and the development of jurisdiction-specific regulatory criteria also means that there is likely to be a degree of divergence as to the interpretation of such terms in the market. We expect industry guidance, market practice, and regulations in this field to continue to evolve.

Any information, data, image, or other content including from a third party source contained, referred to herein or used for whatsoever purpose by Barclays or a third party ("Information"), in relation to any actual or potential 'ESG', 'sustainable' or equivalent objective, issue, factor or consideration is not intended to be relied upon for ESG or sustainability classification, regulatory regime or industry initiative purposes ("ESG Regimes"), unless otherwise stated. Nothing in these materials, including any images included therein, is intended to convey, suggest or indicate that Barclays considers or represents any product, service, person or body mentioned in these materials as meeting or qualifying for any ESG or sustainability classification, label or similar standards that may exist under ESG Regimes. Barclays has not conducted any assessment of compliance with ESG Regimes. Parties are reminded to make their own assessments for these purposes.
